Historical Northern New Jersey

IT IS a far cry from the birch bark, or skin-covered, wigwams of the Leni Lenapes, the Indians who hunted over the hills and fished in the lakes and rivers of Northern New Jersey, to the palatial residences that crown the hilltops and beautify the plains of this section at the present day. But while the evolution has taken two centuries, and although the first settlers were housed in rude shacks or log cabins, nevertheless, as their circumstances improved, their homes received more attention. Each generation improved upon its predecessor in regard to the comfort and convenience of their dwelling places, and by the time of the Revolutionary War there were many comfortable homes and some fine mansions, of which the Washington headquarters, in Morristown, is an example, and, with others, still standing, attest to the good taste and thoroughness of construction of their planners and builders.

The well-merited fame of Northern New Jersey for mineral wealth, fertile soil, and salubrious climate, attracted the attention of home seekers, in the early history of the country, and led to the settlement and beginning of the development of the country, about the year 1700.

The few Indian tribes in this immediate vicinity were called after the Indian names of the rivers along which they dwelt; hence we have the Whippanongs, the Pomptons, the Rockanacks, the Parsipanongs, the Minisinks, and the Musconetcong. A favorite meeting place of the tribes was the Great Pond, now called Lake Hopatcong.

The title to the land came through the grant of Nova Cesera, or New Jersey, to Lord Berkley and Sir George Cartaret, and through them to the Proprietors of East Jersey, an organization still active, after an existence of more than two hundred years. Willis K. Howell, of Morristown, is surveyor-general and treasurer of the organization, through which the title to every acre of land has passed.

Iron, zinc, and copper abounded in the hills of this section, and mines were in operation as early as 1685. The development of these mineral resources gave a great impetus to the settlement of the country, and the establishment of homes, and more than a century ago, many forges were established along the river-side, and the hills were denuded of their forests in order to provide the charcoal to supply them with fuel. Other industries followed, and in time this section became noted for the variety and extent of its industries, and many of the men, prominent in State and National affairs, grew up in the homes established by these pioneers in the development of the nation's wealth.

Morristown and Morris county were named for Governor Lewis Morris, who was the first Governor of the province as distinct from New York. Morris county was set off from Hunterdon by the Provincial Legislature on March 15, 1739, about a month after the appointment of Governor Morris. It originally comprised the territory now embraced in Morris, Sussex, and Warren counties.

The first white settlers came into the country along the lines of the Indian trail leading from the Hudson to the great lakes, which passed up through the valleys and over Pompton Plains. Here Arent Schuyler, Major Anthony Brockholst, David Mandeville, Samuel Bayard, George Ryerson, Samuel Borrie, and others purchased 5,500 acres of land from the Indians; and the following year 1,500 additional acres were purchased on the opposite side of the river, on which lands were established homes—primitive and rude, doubtless, at first, but which improved as time went by. From these homes men have gone forth, achieving fame in the higher walks of life, and making national reputations as jurists, statesmen, and financiers.

Shortly after, New Englanders, who had located along the lower Passaic, came into Morris county, by way of Caldwell and Livingston, and settled in the Highlands of Hanover and Whippany. About 1710, these settlers erected a house of worship and established a graveyard, a deed for the lot being given by John Richards, of Whippany. From Hanover, the settlers gradually worked westward, and Morristown was settled. Some of the honored names in the history of that day were among these settlers from New England.

In 1707, German Valley was settled by Hollanders who had left their country for conscience' sake. They came up the Delaware, and were on their way across the country to join their fellow countrymen at Pompton, when the charms of the valley allured them, and they settled there, and became a most thrifty people, whose succeeding generations have emulated their example.

James Wills, an Englishman, in 1713, bought a large tract of land at Ralstonville, erected a house and mill, and the actual settlement of Meniham was begun. Chester was said to have been laid out in the same year. The roads at first were but bridle paths, apparently, in many cases, along the lines of the greatest resistance; and it was only when the State began to aid in the building of roads that the thoroughfares were reformed in this respect.

The general settlement of the country once assured, then came the development and home building. Public schools were established at an early day, and, as time advanced, came higher schools to fit the youth of the land for the colleges already established.

The names of the early settlers have in many instances become honored through the achievements of their descendants, who, from the beginning of the country's history, have borne their part in war, as well as in the pulpit, the forum, and the marts of trade.

Jacob Ford, son of John Ford, of Woodbridge, born in 1704, was one of the pioneers in the iron business in New Jersey, and from the year 1738, when he applied to the court for a license to keep an inn in New Hanover (Morristown), his name frequently appeared in the public records, and his influence was widely felt. He was the leading man in Morristown of his day. He built the present Washington headquarters, in Morristown, but died before the Revolutionary War.

Abraham Ogden, a distinguished lawyer, had a residence at the junction of Speedwell avenue and the Green. When appointed Surrogate, he built a one-story brick building for his office in the rear of his house, which stood there as part of the old mansion until the building of the Merchants Block a few years ago.

William DeHart, an officer in the Continental army, had a fine home at the corner of South and DeHart streets, Morristown, while just below, at the corner of Pine street, Judge Samuel Tuthill, a son-in-law of Jacob Ford, occupied the house now the Morristown Inn.

Colonel Jacob Drake, for whom Drakeville was named, had an imposing home there. He was an officer in the army, and afterward served in the Legislature.

Peter Dickerson settled in Morristown in 1741, and erected the building at the corner of Water and Spring streets, where he kept a tavern. His house was the headquarters for patriotism in Morristown, and he served as an officer in the army.

Jacob Arnold, who afterward settled in Washington Valley, also kept a tavern in Morristown, which was the headquarters for General Washington for a short time. The building is now the All Souls' Hospital. Colonel Arnold commanded the light horse during the war, and was a man of prominence.

Captain Henry Wick, about whose pretty daughter much romance has been woven, had a home on Jockey Hollow road, which home is still standing. Among the prominent persons with homes in this section, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, in Morristown, were the Burnetts, Kitchells, Bruens, Days, Munsons, Jacksons, Cooks, Howells, Thompsons, Piersons, Allens, and others, prominent in business and official life. Throughout the county at that time were N. M. Mills, John H. Wise, Richard Stephens, Stephen Condict, Martin VanDuyne, Abraham Bockoven, Martin Brown, Jonathan Tompkins, Erasmus Babbitt, Jonathan C. Grimes, John Budd, John C. Welsh, David Ayers, John P. King, Captain

From these homes have gone forth sons to bring honor and renown to their native county. Among these may be mentioned Mahlon Dickerson, United States Senator, Secretary of War, etc.

Among the later settlers in Morris county may be mentioned Judge Stephen Vail, who established extensive iron works at Speedwell, where a number of inventions of great importance were worked out. Chief among these was the working out of John Hopping, Samuel Durvea, Jeremiah Baker, George S. Dufford, Captain Henry Hoffman, Joshua Mott, Isaac Quinby, George Jenkins, Abraham Kanouse, Peter Condict, the Rev. the telegraph by his son, Alfred Vail, in connection with Professor Morse. Here also was employed the father of Theodore N. Vail, who made the telephone a commercial success.

Theodore Randolph, coming to Morris county, did much for its progress, and went from his beautiful home here to fill a seat in the United States Senate, as well as to occupy the Governor's chair.

David H. McAlpin also contributed largely to the development and building up of Morristown. Members of his family occupy beautiful homes at Glen Alpin (on the former Peter Kemble estate, where lately a memorial tablet has been erected), while his son, Dr. D. Hunter McAlpin, lives at Littleton, on a place noted in religious history as the place where the first Sunday school in the State was established.

The Kissel family, prominent in banking circles, have beautiful homes in the outskirts of Morristown: one branch on the old Wheatsheaf Inn property, and Rudolph Kissel at Inamere Farm.

D. Willis James, the most liberal of laymen in religious benevolence, enriched the county by his coming here and establishing his elegant home, as well as by his magnificent memorial gifts to Madison and Morristown.

James A. Webb also added to the beauty of his adopted town by the gift of a memorial chapel; while Joseph W. Ogden, growing up in the manse at Chatham, comes back and settles down on a beautiful estate, known as Loantaka Farms, on the New Vernon road, and honors his sainted father's memory by the erection of a memorial church at Chatham.

Macculloch Hall, in Morristown, has given to the nation men of ability: in statesmanship, in the navy, and in finance, making the name of Miller to live in the annals of the country.

The Sansay house on DeHart street, Morristown, is historic from the fact that Lafayette was given a reception and ball there on his last visit to this country, and is further famous for being ancestral home, which has descended through several generations. A son-in-law of Mahlon Pitney, along in the fifties, erected a stately mansion on the opposite side of the road from the Pitney place, which, after several changes in ownership, is now the palatial summer home of former Governor Franklin Murphy.

William Whitney, a prominent New York merchant, in the beginning of the last century, purchased an extensive tract of land on the New Vernon road, and erected one of the finest homes in the country. After his death, it was purchased by John T. Foote, and is now the home of Robert D. Foote.

The William Gibbons place at Madison, famous in its time for its stable of running horses, is now the seat of Drew Theological Seminary.

The Morris County Children's Home at Parsippany, was originally a fine country mansion, erected by Covington Waddell, a prominent New York lawyer, who married a daughter of the Cobb family. While a few miles away, the stately home, built by William G. Lathrop, of the Boonton Iron Works, shelters the exempt firemen of the State.

The large tracts of land at Morris Plains, formerly the estates of the Stiles and the Piersons, are now the handsome places of Jonathan W. Roberts, the venerable president of the Washington Association of New Jersey, and of Mrs. Stephen Whitney.

the home for years of that gallant soldier, General Joseph W. Revere.

Still standing in Morristown are the General John Doughty house on Mt. Kemble avenue, and the Parson Johnes house on Morris street. The former was the home of one of the most distinguished men of his day in military and civic affairs, while the latter was the home of a close friend of Washington. This house later was the first home of the Memorial Hospital, the first public hospital in Morristown.

On the road to Mendham, the Pitneys, prominent in the law and financial affairs, have their Gordon Burnham came into this county about the middle of the last century, buying the Smith homestead at Morris Plains, now occupied by Mrs. Byron Sherman, which he greatly improved and beautified. His son, Frederick G. Burnham, has recently presented Morristown with a park.

On Kitchell avenue, near Convent, is a unique mansion called "The Holt," where Frank Stockton wrote many of his charming stories. The place is now the home of the Rev. Franklin B. Dwight.

Nearby, on the former Cobb or Scofield place, is the handsome residence of Charles Bradley, the son of the late Associate Justice Bradley, of the United States Supreme Court.

On the former Kellers place at Convent, are the imposing structures of St. Elizabeth College, the first Catholic college of the world, not only in its organization, but also in its scope.

At Parsippany still stands the manor house, "Beaverwick," of Mr. Beverholt, who, with a few others, transplanted an English country gentleman's estate into the new world. He was a lavish entertainer, and the officers of the Continental army, while in Morristown, were frequent partakers of his hospitality.

On the Mendham and Jockey Hollow roads, the ancestral homes of the Mills, Piersons, Guerins, and others have been absorbed in the great estate of Luther Kountz, comprising more than 4,000 acres, whose stately mansion is surpassed by none in this section, and the Gillespie and McClintock estates; while at Morris Plains are a number of handsome homes.

The Betts place, on the Mendham road, is now known as Kahdena, where are the homes of the Halls, Cutlers, McConnells, and other telephone magnates.

The Pierson, Burnett, and Woodruff places, on the Columbia road, have been transformed into the beautiful places of Otto H. Kahn, Mrs. Charles F. Clark, and other residents of the Normandy Park and Heights section.

On the Major Lindsley estate, where, during the Revolutionary War, powder was manufactured for the use of the army, is Whippany Farms, the extensive home of George G. Frelinghuysen, while just below are the buildings and campus of the Morristown School.

Duchess of Gordon, was an extensive land owner in Bernards township, which she had purchased on the advice of a brother of Governor Morris.

William Alexander, titular Lord Stirling, of Scotland, a major-general in the Continental army, had a large manor house ataskingridge, which is still standing, where he spent his time "in settling a good farm in the wilderness, and in bringing to it some of the productions of Europe."

The early settlers in that vicinity were English and Scotch

The Bernards Hills section was noted for its aristocratic connections early in the history of the country. Lord Neil Campbell, brother of the Duke of Argyle, lived in great style on an estate of 1,600 acres near the junction of the North and South branches of the Raritan river. His grandson, John Stevens, married Petty Alexander, sister of the last Earl of Stirling, and they are the ancestors of the Stevens family, of Hoboken and Bernardsville.

gentlemen and yeomen, Dutch burgers and peasants, and Germans from the Palatine—many of them Redemptionists.

In Pluckamin, in 1777, after the battle of Princeton, Washington, with his army, rested over Sunday; and in the Fennier house, still standing, he wrote his official report of the battle. Two years later, a portion of the army, under General Knox, spent a portion of the winter there.

Bernards township was named for Sir William Bernards, one of the royal governors of the province. The old inn, known as Bullion's tavern, often appears in Revolutionary annals, and was located where the stone tavern now stands.

Through its quiet streets, at various times, marched the soldiers of the Continental army; the last time, when on their way to Yorktown, they were accompanied by their French allies, who, in their fine uniforms and equipments, and military bearing, were quite a contrast.

The most interesting historic house in this section is the old Kirkpatrick homestead, on the Mine Brook road, the birthplace of Andrew Kirkpatrick, a former Chief Justice of New Jersey.

The most distinguished of the former residents of this section were William L. Dayton, Justice of the Supreme Court of this State, United States Senator, and candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States in 1856, and the Southards, father and son, who were occupying foremost positions in the national government during the same period.

After the Revolutionary War, this vicinity settled down into a quiet farming community for a century, when, attracted by the beautiful scenery and the prospect of development, Messrs. Seney and Post purchased estates in the Bernards Hills, erecting fine mansions, and beginning the improvements which have made this one of the choicest residential sections in the world. This district is now the summer home of ex-Judge John F. Dillon, former United States Senator John F. Dryden, lately deceased; Colonel Anthony R. Kuser, Richard V. Lindabury, Walter P. Bliss, J. William Clarke, Haley Fiske, Adrian H. Joline, Henry R. Kunhardt, Francis G. Lloyd, Percy R. Pyne; C. Ledyard Blair and Clarence Blair Mitchell, grandsons of John I. Blair, one of New Jersey's greatest men in his day; Walter G. Ladd, Wm. H. Page, John A. Roebling, Dean Sage, E. T. H. Talmage, the Stevens and Balantine families, and other men, prominent in public affairs, who find that quiet communion with nature in her most charming aspect in these Somerset Hills is a restful contrast with the absorbing cares of business.

Taking Morristown as a center, it is claimed that, within a limited area, there are more beautiful and costly homes than can be found anywhere else on the globe, and happy, indeed, should be those whose lives are cast in such pleasant places.
